Habits are acquired early in life. Children, who are taught the value of money and the habit of saving, grow up into good business men and capable women.

The easiest way to teach children to save, is to start a Savings Account for each child ($1.00 each is sufficient). After a child has saved another dollar to make an additional deposit, he or she will have a better appreciation of just what a dollar stands for, and how much work and self-denial it represents.

Tricks of Tropical Plts.

That plants eat and drink in their own way through the soil is a well-known fact. But in South America is a species of orchid which takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty simply by letting down a tube into the water. When not in use, the tube is coiled up on the top of the plant. In Mexico there is a plant that likes to change its attire three times a day just like any fastidious person —it is white in the morning, red at noon, and blue in the evening. At times it gives out a very strong perfume, and at other times it is absolutely odorless. There is another odd Mexican plant the odor of which causes people to lose their way and makes their sense of direction nil until the smell ceases.

Central India owns a tree whose leaves are heavily charged with electricity, and merely by touching them gives a person a distinct shock. In Brazil similar electric power is put to lighting purposes. Within the immediate vicinity of such a tree a person can see well enough to read the finest print, and another is so luminous that it can be plainly distinguished in the darkest nights for a distance of more than a mile.

But the most wonderfully constituted plant of Brazil is the ball-throwing one. It is a small fungus about the size of a pea, which propels a ball to a distance of several inches with a distinctly audible report.

The Azores.

The population of the Azores is about 245,000, the number of inhabitants having changed but little in the last century, and, if anything, having diminished. This fact is probably due more to various political and social conditions than to climatic, agricultural, and other conditions of the islands. In the early days the Portuguese literally "raised cane" on the islands, and established a large sugar trade with England and other countries. Tobacco and fruits were also produced in great quantities, but, with the discovery and settlement of Brazil and other South American countries, Portugal rather discouraged production in the Azores in order to aid her colonies in South America. With the sugar and tobacco trade snatched from them, the Azoreans began the cultivation of the vine, and the production of wine and other liquors became one of the chief industries of the islands. The population consists mainly of Portuguese, Moorish, and Flemish settlers, with a few negroes and a fair sprinkling of English settlers.

Royal Road to Learning.

This phrase is said to date back to the time when Euclid opened a school of mathematics at Alexandria. He was asked by King Ptolemy whether he could not explain his art to him in a simpler manner. "Sire," said the geometrician, "there is no royal road to learning."

DESIRE ANOTHER WAR

Hungarians Anxious to Fight Russia.

Would Like to Oppose Soviet Menace, But Allies Do Not Want to Permit Mobilization In Country of Former Enemy—Success of Bolshevik Against Poland Creates Grave Problem.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—Hungary has asked the permission of Great Britain and France to attack the Soviet army. Such an attack would involve permission, likewise, to reorganize the Hungarian army, the demobilization of which was provided for by the Hungarian peace treaty.

The Allies are benefitting over Hungary's request, according to a high French official because they fear Hungary would expect too many concessions in the terms of the treaty.

In the meantime the situation between the Allies and the Soviet Government grows more and more involved. It would take infinitely more than the reported Anglo-French expeditionary force of 100,000 men and forty air squadrons to defeat the Bolshevik. One million men would be more like it. One hundred thousand, however, might be sufficient to check the Reds off Polish soil and even drive a wedge into their front.

There was a time when that number of men could have walked through to Petrograd and Moscow. But just at this moment, the Bolshevik army has reached the zenith of its efficiency. The stories of the Murmansk, Archangel, Kolchak, Denikine, Yudenitch and Pilsudski campaigns have all been remarkably alike. At first there were marvellous successes, then retreats almost as marvellous and finally complete failure. The moral of these stories is the same: "You can beat the Bolshevik temporarily but the Bolshevik will beat you ultimately."

A familiar chapter in the history of anti-Bolshevik warfare all agree on one thing—it would be unfortunate to start another campaign that will but prolong indefinitely the agonies of the people in Russia and Poland, and especially of those living in the regions which have been fought over and where fighting is going on this very day. If there must be another war it should not be prepared for in the boulevard. Premier Millerand characterized the former wars, but must be with the idea of subduing Soviet Russia by force can succeed. Neither men nor money should be spared, but the war should be carried on with the same dogged determination that has characterized the war against Germany. There is little hope that Poland and the entente will go to this extent, and therefore an armistice with a speedy peace is looked upon as the best way out of the present troubles.

But the Allies feel that they cannot permit the Bolsheviki to register a victory over Poland that would practically mean complete subjection of the Poles. Polish requests which Great Britain and France would put upon Soviet demands of Poland in the arranging of an armistice are set forth in a note, which has been despatched to the Warsaw Government by the British and French Governments, it was learned here Friday. Poland requested the views of Great Britain and France on possible armistice terms, but the Government of the entente at Paris have notified the Polish Government that they will not permit Poland to accept possible Soviet armistice demands involving:

First—Whole or partial disarmament of Poland.

Second—A change in the Polish system of Government dictated or brought about by the Soviets.

Third—Acceptance by Poland of a boundary line less favorable than that provisionally drawn by Premier Lloyd George.

Fourth—The use of Poland as a bridgehead, in every sense, between Germany and Russia.

British Soldiers Rebel.

WARSAW, Aug. 3.—Twenty British soldiers assigned to the task of unloading a cargo of war material consigned to Poland have refused to continue their work here, according to Poles who have arrived here from that city. Eighty soldiers were detailed for this duty, and the twenty who refused to work were arrested by the order of the British commander in that port. Sympathizers with the dock workers refused to unload the ship upheld the British and protested against their arrest.

A great crowd assembled later in the night in the port where the British soldiers are being held, and there were rumors that two British soldiers were killed while guarding the men under detention. Evidences of striking dockmen are reported as violent, as reeling runs high since the British have shown a hand in unloading material being shipped into Poland. Anti-tax demonstrations in Danzig Thursday evening increased the disorders there, it is said.

REFERENDUM DELAYED

Vote to be Taken in Ontario in April, 1921

Original Date, Which Was October 25 Next, Proved Unpopular With Large Sections of Public in Ontario So Dominion Government Decided to Arrange Postponement to Permit Revision of Voters' Lists.

OTTAWA, Aug. 3.—On account of representations made through various organizations in Ontario the Government has decided to postpone the date for holding the referendum vote in the Province of Ontario, until Monday, April 18, 1921, in order to permit a revision of the Ontario Provincial voters' lists. The date originally set for the taking of the vote in Ontario was October 25 next. The postponement decision has become necessary in order that the Ontario voters' lists may be thoroughly revised and brought up to date before the vote is taken.

By the legislation passed by the House of Commons on June 28 last, special machinery is provided for the taking of the referendum vote in Ontario, as there were in that province existing provincial voters' lists, which had been prepared and used in the provincial election of October, 1919. It was therefore provided in the Franchise Act that the provincial voters' lists of 1919 should be used in Ontario should be used without revision for any vote in that province before December 31, 1920. The provision applied solely to Ontario, because Parliament felt that the lists in Ontario were so recent that it was unlikely that it would be necessary and unwise to go to the expense of revision. However, it has now been pointed out that the provincial lists of 1919 are by no means satisfactory and that if they are used for the purpose of the referendum vote the disqualification of a large number of a very large number of electors, and particularly of returned soldiers. Various organizations in Ontario have so objected to the use of these lists for the referendum vote, without revision.

Immediately after the passage of the Act, 3 June last, the Dominion Alliance passed a formal resolution of protest against the use of the Ontario provincial lists for the referendum, and accompanied the same with a letter from Rev. B. H. Spence, secretary of the Alliance.

A police officer and a well-known citizen of Toronto had a tussle over a dog. The citizen was arrested and put in the dog wagon.

QUEENSTOWN INDIGNANT.

Trans-Atlantic Steamers Will Not Call There.

DUBLIN, Aug. 3.—Queenstown is indignant that trans-Atlantic liners have been ordered not to call there. The Cunarder Caronia, with 350 booked for Queenstown, and the White Star liner Celtic, with 800, are expected not to call on Monday. Passengers will have to cross from Liverpool after delay and expense. No orders have yet been received at Queenstown about the Baltic, on which Mannix sailed Saturday from New York.

Nothing can prevent Archbishop Mannix from visiting Ireland after disembarking in Liverpool like any other passengers bound for Ireland, Arthur Griffith, acting President of the Irish republic, said, regarding the coming of Archbishop Mannix: "The British Government made a mistake in making a question over the archbishop's coming to Ireland. The Government would have done its cause much less harm by doing nothing and letting him come."

Interest in whether the archbishop will continue talking here as in America, dressed in the papal warfare is pronounced. It is expected that the word from Rome will have a cooling effect.

Correspondents find among the Sinn Fein leaders, Roman Catholic and Protestant alike, less enthusiasm regarding Archbishop Mannix's coming than the welcome he has been shown in New York. They obviously wish the whole incident had not happened, as it tends to make it appear the Sinn Fein is a religious movement, when they wish to keep it purely national.

The importance given the Roman Catholic prelate in the movement, gives a false accent to the Irish National movement. While the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland is largely with the Sinn Feiners, it is not entirely so, they assert, and its priests are Sinn Feiners not because they are priests, but because they are Irishmen.

GENERAL LUCAS ESCAPED.

Refutes the Story That He Was Liberated.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Gen. Lucas, divisional superintendent of the Irish Constabulary, who was captured and held prisoner by Sinn Fein for several days, made it clear Monday that he escaped and was not set free by his captors, as had been reported. The general's story appeared in the form of an interview in the London Express.

The general said he scratched himself badly and strained the tendons of his leg by passing through the bars of the window through which he made his escape. He also said there were three men constantly guarding him and that the latter was an almost insurmountable task.

These men were very nice to me," Gen. Lucas said. "All they could think of, all they could discuss, was their experiences during their internment following the Easter rebellion."

The general then said that after his escape he did not hide in caves, as was earlier reported, but always after he had gone. He traveled through three counties, but spent the nights in the houses of friends. He only exercised at twilight, and never made his way along the main roads, keeping to by-paths and in the hedges as much as possible.

During the time it took him to make sure his escape, Gen. Lucas says, he never once saw a soldier or a policeman.

He spent much of his time in reading during the days and was always well fed and cared for. Frequently, he says, he was taken on night fishing expeditions by friends.

GIRLS STILL MISSING.

Thorold Mystery Remains as Deep as Ever.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., Aug. 3.—Monday, in a last effort to find a trace of the two little girls, Catharine Beechman and Margaret Boucock, who disappeared missing from their homes in Thorold for some time, was made by dragging the Welland Canal at the levels between locks 22 and 23.

This was done by a long line was stretched across the water with hooks attached. These were dragged slowly along the bottom. The water foot was also being greatly lowered, in case the long lines missed anything. men on a raft dragged the water along the shore. Nothing was found.

Father of the little girls, Reuben Boucock, father of Margaret, assisted in the work, but expressed himself strongly convinced that his little girl had not been drowned. "I am certain," he said, "that both little girls have been sold to white slavers and may be in Toronto or Buffalo now. But I am also sure Margaret will be able to tell somebody who she is before they hold her long if this is true." He also expressed conviction that his little girl had not been murdered. He said his wife was slowly sinking down under the terrible strain.

Belgian Veterans Angry.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 3. — Thousands of ex-service men surrounded the Chamber of Deputies Saturday to demonstrate dissatisfaction with the Government's treatment of former soldiers. They declare that a lump sum be paid every man who served in the war.

A force of soldiers broke the police cordon and invaded the Chamber by disregarding Burgomaster Max's appeals. Eventually they were persuaded to leave peacefully.

While in the chamber the soldiers broke doors and windows and hurled ushers aside. The men then marched through the streets with banners, while the astonished police tes sat powerless to quell the tumult.

A Curious Rose.

Flowers seem so highly specialized that one does not associate them with the vegetative or growing part of the plant. Yet there is no doubt that blossoms have had a leafy origin, even though this is not always very obvious. A strange case of a flower breaking away into a shoot is recorded. A rose bush growing in a garden in Natal, South Africa, was responsible for the variety. The bud, instead of expanding into a flower, crept up a stalk, at the end of which was borne a rose that was finely developed.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO, Aug. 3.—With around 4,400 cattle on sale at the Union Yards yesterday, and the fact of a Civic Holiday giving an added day to-day, the market for practically all classes was inclined to be a little easier. Shooting In Chesley.

CHESLEY, Aug. 3.—Bert Cavill, a drayman, was fatally shot by Joslin Green, an employe of the boot and stead factory here, about nine o'clock Thursday morning. Four shots were fired, the last one being fired when entering the mouth, carrying away a couple of teeth and lodging in the back of the neck, the other piercing the lungs and lodging in the spinal column. The affray resulted from a dispute over the removal of a piano, on which there was a lien, from Green's premises. Reports state that there is no hope for the victim's recovery. Green has been committed to the Walkerton Jail on a charge of shooting with intent to kill.

On Wednesday night, acting under the instructions of the holders of the lien, Cavill removed a piano from Green's house, and left same on the latter's lawn. He returned the next morning for the planks and was met by Green, who wanted to know when he had bought the house. An argument ensued, in which Green, who is a large man, threatened to attack Cavill with an axe which he held. Cavill threatened to have Green arrested, whereupon the latter hurried out a revolver from his hip pocket, and fired four shots in quick succession. Two were misses, but the others found their mark.

Dr. A. Sinclair was called to Chesley to operate, but little hope is held out for Cavill's recovery. Green was taken before Magistrate Bell, who committed him to Walkerton Jail. When arrested, Green stated that the shots had been fired in self-defence.

Germany on Reparations.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—Following a careful study of the economic situation in Germany, former President Poincare, who was a member of the Reparation Commission, in a statement appearing in Le Matin Monday, announced that Germany's estimate of the indemnity due France is approximately seven and a quarter billion marks. These figures are extremely significant in indicating what Germany's attitude will be at the time when the Allies propose to demand one hundred and twenty billion marks, of which amount France would get sixty billions.

Lloyd George Takes a Rest.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Prime Minister Lloyd George is going to Switzerland for a complete rest from international politics, of which he has had an overdose. How he is to achieve his purpose, with the Supreme Economic Council sitting at Geneva and the Congress of Amsterdam Internationale storming at Zurich, isn't easy to see.

He greatly resents the stories that his health is failing, and since they have been circulated he has shown increased activity, actually going to the length of appearing in the House of Commons to answer questions.

LONDON CONCERT PARTY.

The London Concert Party will render a unique program. There will be ensemble singing, but the individual work of the artists will be especially stressed. Miss Mitchener will be the Soprano, Miss Dewey will be the Contralto, Mr. Willgoose the Tenor, and Mr. Brouwer, the Baritone.

Miss Mitchener will appear as a soloist in several selections, in both a heavier and a lighter vein. She has an usually clear lyric soprano, which, accompanied by a vivacious manner, will greatly please. Miss Dewey is a violinist of rare ability, and will render various selections. Mr. Brouwer is one of the best baritones in Canada. He has a very robust voice. In addition to his solo work, at the evening program, he will lead Community Singing, drilling the audience in rendering together several of the familiar songs. Song Sheets will be distributed, giving a verse or two of each. This will be one of the most enjoyable events of Chautauqua Week. Mr. Willgoose will preside at the piano, and assist in other ways.

For an opening number the work of the London Concert Party is an offering that will please greatly, and will start the program with a splendid swing. They will give a full concert in the afternoon and a prelude of some fifty minutes in the evening.

Famous Comedy "Nothing But the Truth"

TO BE PRESENTED AT CHAUTAUQUA

Vivian Players, Direct From New York, to Play Greatest Laugh Producer Known in the Theatre.

It takes a good company as well as a good play to satisfy a Canadian audience to-day. Mediocrity in either is inexcusable, playgoers feel, for Canada has begun to develop a taste in drama that augurs well for the advancement of the stage.

The Percival Vivian Players, who appear on the Chautauqua program this year, is one of the best "road companies" that ever left New York. They take their place with the Ben Greet Players, who made the revival of Shakespeare a surety.

Furthermore they will be seen in one of the greatest of recent American plays, the rollicking farce, "Nothing But the Truth," by James Montgomery, in which William Collier starred for two seasons.

Lord Selkirk's Colony

THOMAS DOUGLAS, Earl of Selkirk, known in Canadian history as the founder of the Red River Colony, was a member of the ancient Douglas family, renowned in Scottish song and story. At an early age Lord Selkirk displayed that broad humanitarian sympathy which characterized his whole life, and took an active interest in attempting to better the lot of the Highland poor who were suffering great hardships as a result of the long Napoleonic wars.

It is worth noting that Lord Selkirk was probably the first man of his age to conceive in outline, and even in some detail, a scheme of national defence that foreshadowed the Territorial plan.

This scheme, which he placed before the House of Lords in 1806, provided that every young man between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five years should be thoroughly trained as a soldier. Besides advocating his project in the House of Lords, the young Scottish peer published his ideas on this new important subject, and they stand to-day available as constituting a noteworthy document, the anticipation of a remarkable man who had the misfortune to live before his time.

At length one problem gripped Lord Selkirk's imagination to the exclusion of all else and the promotion of emigration became the paramount interest of his life. To this question he devoted his remaining years, his heart, his intellect, and his fortune, and the West can never repay the deep debt it owes to the man who after having lived as an apostle died as a martyr to the cause of western settlement.

It was through reading the "Voyages" of Sir Alexander Mackenzie that the Scottish dreamer and philanthropist first learned of the vast tracts of fertile country "at the western extremity of Canada upon the waters which fall into Lake Winnipeg." But Selkirk did more than dream. He was essentially one who made dreams come true, and when in 1802 the Government forbade the establishment of a colony on the Red river, he turned his attention to more accessible parts of Canada. Through his energetic assistance several hundred Scottish crofters, who had been driven from their clearances in the Old Land found new homes in Prince Edward Island and Ontario. But Selkirk never forgot the vision of a great western colony and by 1810 he had evolved a plan by which that vision was to become a reality. Aided by friends he acquired control of £35,000 of stock in the Hudson Bay Company, and in the same year he had laid his plan before the directors. They were to give him a district of about 110,000 square miles, and he in return was to settle a large colony thereon, assuming all the cost of transportation, government and protection.

Needless to say, Selkirk's plan met with strong opposition. But no amount of opposition could quell Lord Selkirk's enthusiasm, and in July, 1811, the first party, consisting of slightly over one hundred men and women set sail for the distant shores of Hudson Bay. There, under the leadership of Captain Miles Macdonell, the little band spent their first winter in Canada. In the following summer they reached their destination on the Red river, and the settlement of the west had begun.

Other parties were sent out in 1813 and in 1814, and it soon became clear to the Northwest Company that they must fight this Scottish philanthropist to a finish. "Lord Selkirk must be driven to abandon his project," for "his success would strike at the very existence of our trade," wrote one partner to another and steps were taken at once to prevent further settlement. More than a hundred of the Selkirk colonists were induced to settle in Ontario, and about a half hundred more were driven to the northern end of Lake Winnipeg. The colony appeared to be completely broken up, and great was the jubilation of the Northwest Company partners at their headquarters at Fort William.

But Lord Selkirk was not to be defeated thus. He organized another party and placed at its head Robert Semple, a captain of the British army, who was to go out as governor. This company, known as the Kildonan group, had a quick voyage, and arrived on the Red river in the autumn of 1815.

Through the disbanding of the De Meuron regiments at the close of the war of 1812-14, Lord Selkirk was able to secure one hundred of these ex-soldiers as military settlers. Lord Selkirk set out on his journey westward and at the Sault learned of the frightful tragedy at Seven Oaks where Governor Semple and twenty-one colonists had been slain. He hastened on to Fort William and placed the Nor' West leaders under arrest, and sent them under guard to Montreal.

The arrival of Lord Selkirk at Red river with a strong military force encouraged the colonists to return from Lake Winnipeg and his presence revived their hopes for a settlement of their dispute with the Northwest Company. With the courts and legislatures controlled in Lower Canada by the Northwesters and in Upper Canada by the family compact, Lord Selkirk had no chance whatever. He was forced to pay fines amounting to £2,000, and thoroughly disheartened and discouraged, he sailed for Europe in 1818, a broken-down and worn-out man. He died in the south of France two years later, "unwept, unhonored and unsung"—the pioneer empire-builder who spent himself and his fortune in his efforts to make a great dream come true.—W. Everard Edmonds, in "Broad Horizons."

The Shortest Reign.

It is not generally known that the King of Spain succeeded not his father, but his sister, the Infanta Mercedes, who was, though only six years old, Queen of Spain from the death of her father, Alfonso XII., to the birth of the present king. Altogether she reigned 169 days, probably the shortest reign on record. The Salic Law, which bars females from the throne, does not operate in Spain, and until the sex of Alfonso XII's posthumous child was determined, the eldest of his two daughters automatically succeeded him.

Lift off Corns!

Doesn't hurt a bit and Freezone costs only a few cents.

With your fingers! You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs little at any drug store; apply a few drops upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!

STORY OF CARPENTIER

BOXER IS THE IDOL OF FRENCH PEOPLE.

Began Life as a Pit Boy and Is Now a Champion—Unlike the Pugilists of the United States, He "Did His Bit" Nobly During the Years of the Great War.

IN "From Pit Boy to Champion Boxer," the biography of Georges Carpentier, written by Mr. F. Hurdman-Lucas, we learn that the French fighter was born in what his enthusiastic Boswell calls the "obscure mining town of Lens" in the year 1894, and is now something short of 26 years old. As a writer we consider Mr. Hurdman-Lucas to be a clever boxer or something, but at least he appears to have first-hand knowledge of what he tries to write about. He was the first Englishman to recognize that Carpentier was something out of the common, and was the timekeeper in the boy's first important match in Paris. He mentions that Georges' parents were of the peasant class, and that the boy was sent to work in the mines when he was 12 years old. He has also the theory that the lad's physical prowess was derived from his grandfather, who was a man of unusual strength and above the ordinary stature, while his parents appear to have been nothing out of the common.

Francois Descamps, who later was to win fame and fortune as Carpentier's manager, had recently opened a boxing and athletic academy in the town, and here the lad used to resort on every opportunity. Though of frail build he was unusually symmetrical and Descamps, a good judge, thought the lad might make a gymnast. He gave him some acrobatic lessons but soon perceived that he had a natural bent for boxing. He had not only the grace and speed, but he had the fighting instinct. The quickness with which he came to skillfully use the "mufflers," which Mr. Lucas has apparently nicknamed the boxing gloves, delighted Descamps, and presently he arranged with Georges' parents that the boy should quit the mine and become a pugilist. Georges was then earning five francs a week which he turned over to his mother and Descamps agreed to pay her the same amount. So he became Georges' manager, and mentor, and for all practical purposes his father.

Descamps appears to have had some slight ring experience, but perhaps not so slight as to justify one to speak slightingly of it in his presence. At any rate he was qualified to teach the boy. Mr. Hurdman-Lucas holds the Aristotelian theory that all knowledge is born in one, and that Georges merely needed to have his lore on the subject "drawed out," as he says. His ring debut was made when he was 13 years old and weighed less than 100 pounds. His victim was an alleged pugilist, traveling with a little circus who used to curdle the blood of audiences by his challenges, probably a rum-soaked rubber of some fourth-rate boxer. But he was heavier and bigger that the "mere chit of a boy," as Mr. Lucas calls him, and the fact that he was knocked out attracted local attention. Several others of the same tribe were polished off in quick order by the lad, and Descamps believed this kind of practice was extremely useful to his protege.

His first engagement of any importance with with Kid Salmon, whom the author speaks of respectfully as "the redoubtable" and it may be said here the names of nine-tenths of the Battling Anthracites, K. O. Cokes and other ferocious sluggers whom he mentions are unknown to fame. But Salmon, an Englishman, had challenged all France at his weight, and in vain until Descamps matched Carpentier with him, and at that time the notion that a Frenchman could lick an Englishman seemed a mere fantasy. The fight took place when Carpentier was fourteen years old, and to everyone's appurtenment the frail child more than held his own until the thirteenth round, when Salmon was disqualified on a foul. Six weeks later they met again and this time in the twelfth round a sponge was tossed into the ring on Georges' behalf, and greatly to his indignation. Indeed, we are informed that Descamps had to carry him struggling and kicking from the ring. It was in this fight that Mr. Hurdman-Lucas first saw Georges.

The next three or four years saw Georges growing from a flyweight to a lightweight, then to a welterweight, and finally to a middleweight and and light heavyweight, which is what he is called to-day. His successes were by no means unbroken. Several times he met defeat, but only once was he knocked out, and then by a Frenchman named Gloria, the best man of his weight in France. He began to meet Englishmen of some note, and usually won, the result being to warn old Albion, as the writer says, that "the foreign yoke was knocking at the door." He lost to several Americans, including the Dixie Kid, Frank Klaus, who taught him the art of in-fighting which hitherto had been absent from his repertoire, and Billy Papke. He then fell back on Englishmen and beat Bandsman Rice, Gunner Wells and finally Joe Beckett. Many of his defeats were moral victories, since they all showed his absolute rameness, and he learned from every battle. It is said that he is never hurt twice by the same blow. Just what chance he is likely to have with Dempsey several thousands of Toronto people may judge for themselves by his performance recently in that city. Certainly he has the best wishes of every soldier not only in Europe and in Canada but also in the United States.

LIFE WAS A MISERY TO HER

Says this Woman Until Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Owen Sound, Ont.—"I suffered for ten years with female organic trouble, neuraigia and indigestion, and was weak and had such bad pains I could hardly walk or stand up at times. When I would sweep I would have to go and lie down. I could not sleep at night, and would wander around the house half the time. I tried everything but nothing did me any good, and the last doctor I had told me he never expected me to be on my feet again or able to do a day's work. One day one of your little books was left at my door and my husband said I should try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I thank God I did, for it cured me, and I am now well and strong. I think there is no remedy like the Vegetable Compound for anyone who has my troubles, and have recommended it to my neighbors. You can publish my letter for the benefit of those I can't reach."—Mrs. HENRY A. MITCHELL, 1767 7th Ave., East, Owen Sound, Ont.

Substitute for Tea.

There are over thirty plants used in different parts of the world as substitutes for tea. One of them is used in the Mauritius, and comes from the dried leaves of Angraecum Fragans, a fragrant orchid, a parasite like the mistletoe, and allied to the well-known vanilla of the odor of which it reminds us. It grows on trees in the Isle of Bourbon, and the Africans have long employed its leaves as medicine, and the infusion of them as a drink. The infusion is exceedingly pleasant to the smell, and in taste something between vanilla and bitter almonds. But the leaf contains no theine, and therefore cannot be classed in its virtues, uses, and waste-retarding influence with that substance.

Smokeless Powder.

The size and shape of powder grain is based on the fact that when smokeless powder is ignited, it burns only on the surface. The larger the exposed surface is, the faster the grain burns. In order to give cannon powder a larger burning surface, the grains are pierced with seven holes. When a grain is ignited, it burns not only on its outside surface, but also on the inside surface of these holes. As the outside of the grain burns away, the surface diminishes, but as the inside surface of the holes burn, the surface increases. These two factors may be made to balance.

Armchairs For the Navy.

The innovation of supplying comfortable armchairs and rockers on board the vessels of the British navy is to be made next. Hereto-fore it has not been regarded as wise to give the men these comforts.

Mention Mark Twain to the average American and he at once thinks of the Mississippi river and the life of its pilots whom Mark Twain has immortalised in his writings.

But there is still another spot in this world which Mark Twain has endeared to readers by inimitable wit and delightful pen pictures. Hawaii, as Mark saw it and wrote and talked about it, has been so inextricably interwoven with Hawaii as we hear of it through magazine articles and newspaper comment, that we are wont to forget his contribution to the immortalising of the island paradise of the Pacific.

The appearance on the Chautauqua platform of Miss Mildred Lee Clemens, a cousin of the great American humorist, recalls at once the tie that binds Mark Twain with the islands. For she brings to American audiences a revivified Mark Twain point of view. Not only does she inherit some of the traditional Clemens humor, but she also has followed the paths that Mark Twain made across the islands.

Automobile Accident.

Friday afternoon last while Mr. Clarence Price, who lives near Newburgh, was proceeding along the Newburgh road, just north of the East Ward school, in his auto, he turned to the right to pass a wagon loaded with peas coming into Napanee, when two small boys, Harry Barrett, aged seven years, and Ernest Conger, aged six years, playing on the sidewalk, suddenly ran into the road towards the wagon and right in front of the auto. The running board of the car struck both boys knocking them down. The little Conger lad was rendered unconscious and was immediately rushed to Dr. Stratton's office where an examination showed that both lads were suffering from scratches and bruises, but no broken bones. Every assistance possible was rendered by the driver of the auto, and it would appear that he was in no way to blame for the unfortunate occurance. The injured lads are getting along nicely.

Died at Vancouver.

A Vancouver paper says: Mrs. Mina Carscallen, 1673 Fifth avenue west, a pioneer resident of this city, was found dead in the bedroom of her home on Saturday by the police, who had been notified by the neighbors that she had not been seen about her house lately. The police believe she was due to natural causes, but have removed the body to the city morgue pending a decision by the coroner. Mrs. Carscallen was well known among old-time residents of Vancouver. She was a clerk in the Hudson's Bay, shortly after the store had moved to its present site on Granville St., and at one time owned a large tract of land on Lulu Island. One of the pioneer brick buildings in the city was named "Carscallen" after the family, which was very prominent in Vancouver twenty years ago.—Deceased was a former resident of Napanee and will be remembered by the older residents. She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Empey and spent her childhood days in Napanee residing on Mill street. She was the last of a family of five.

Baby Found in River.

Tuesday afternoon the body of a baby was taken from the river at Varker. A young lad found it while cleaning out the sluice way leading to Benjamin's mill. It had evidently been in the water for some months as the little body was badly decomposed. A cloth tied tightly about its neck would lead to the belief that the child had been strangled to death before being thrown into the river. Coroner G. H. Cowan, of Napanee, was summoned and viewed the remains. An inquest will be held. A jury was empanelled and then the inquest was adjourned until Tuesday next.

Napanee Bowlers Certainly Showed Real Sportsmanship.

The little town of Napanee possesses a great deal more than good bowlers; it possesses real sportsmen. This was evidenced yesterday when thirty-two bowlers came to the city to play against local bowlers. When it is realized that in the Napanee Bowling Club there are only forty playing members, it can be seen that Napanee sent almost their entire club to play here yesterday. Instead of picking out three or four teams from the best players on the roster, the Napanee Bowling Club decided to send eight teams, and whether they won or lost, they came down with the determination to do their best and give everyone a chance. The teams really did splendid playing, the score in some cases not indicating the difference between the local and visiting rinks. The act of the Napanee Bowling Club in sending down almost their entire club is a most commendable one, and shows that the bowlers from Napanee are in the game for the sport, and know the real meaning of what a true sportsman is—Kingston Standard.

An Active Old Lady.

Mrs. Thos. Wilson, of Napanee, will celebrate her 96th birthday on August 20th. Chautauqua!

A number of people have been asking if the Napanee Chautauqua is the same outfit which played in Picton recently. We would correct any such impression. The Napanee Chautauqua is a much larger and better organization than that which appeared in Picton. Picton people were none too well pleased with the programme presented, but we can assure the people of Napanee and country that the organization coming here is everything that is claimed for it. All their talent is the best procurable and everything will be on a scale worthy of the large organization back of the Dominion Chautauquas.

A Venerable Lady.

She is a remarkable woman for one of her years, is bearing the ninetieth milestone of life's journey, and until quite recently kept her own home. She is very vivacious and assists with the work of the house and takes a keen interest in all that is going on. She makes her home at present with her sons, the Messrs. The new buildings at the Driving Park are nearing completion and the magnificent park with its race track, grand stand and buildings is being put in shape for the three days county fair to be held on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, September 14th, 15th, and 16th. Special attractions, sports, etc., are being arranged for each day and evening. The Havana Red Sox baseball team, (colored), will be in Napanee for the three days, and will play a different team each day. Outside teams are being arranged for, and two have already been secured, so good sport may be looked for. A real new midway and a big one has been arranged for also, so the amusement end of the fair will be well looked after. The prize list will be issued next week and it will pay everyone, be he, market gardner, poultryman, or lover of flowers, or fancy work, to secure a copy and get ready to make your exhibit. The special prizes offered this year will be larger than ever. Some of the special features will also be explained in the prize list, so apply to the Secretary, Mr. J. L. The Late Geo. N. Smith.

One of Napanee's well known residents passed away last week in the person of Mr. George N. Smith. The deceased was visiting his son, Mr. Roy Smith, of Bassano, Alberta, at the time. On Monday, July 19th, he suffered a paralytic stroke. An operation was performed on Tuesday night but the patient never fully regained consciousness after the stroke, and death followed on Sunday, July 25th. The remains were brought to Napanee, and funeral services, conducted by the Rev. T. H. P. Anderson, were held in Grace Methodist Church, after which interment took place in the family plot, Riverside cemetery. George Nelson Smith was born in the Township of Richmond in 1854. In 1877 he married Eugenia Adelaide Williams, daughter of the late Rev. Hiram Williams. Two children survived, J. Thorold Smith, of Montreal, and Roy Smith, of Bassano, Alberta. He leaves one brother, Elias P. Smith, of the township of Richmond. The deceased was well known in Napanee and the surrounding country where he had many friends. For some eighteen years he devoted himself to the care of an invalid wife, a task which he performed without complaint. He lived for many years in the township of Richmond, later moving to Napanee, where his wife died in 1917.

"NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH"

Robert Bennett is the central figure in an intrigue that grows from his bet to tell nothing but the truth for twenty-four hours. He is led into this embarrassing agreement by the request of his bethrothed to invest for her $10,000 she has raised for charity. She wants this sum doubled in the stock market, as her father had promised to double that amount if she could bring up the figure to $20,000.

The hero's determination to win the bet for his bethrothed causes no end of trouble for the parties on the other side and gets Bennett himself into some amazing tangles before the striking of the clock finally releasing him from his George Washington character and wins the bet for him.

MR. VIVIAN'S WORK IN "THE WAYFARER."

When "The Wayfarer" was produced last winter at the Madison square Garden in New York by the Interchurch World Movement, the staging being the work of Percy Vivian, probably two of the most sincere compliments for his splendid production came from David Belasco and Daniel Frohman.

Mr. Frohman congratulated Mr Vivian personally on his work, expressing the opinion that "The Wayfarer" was the most impressive dramatic production that he had ever seen. Mr. Belasco, in a letter to the Interchurch World Movement, said:

Gentlemen—

Allow me to express to your great organization my admiration of the high purpose that has prompted your fine production of "The Wayfarer" at Madison Square Garden. Aside from its undoubted success as a dramatic spectacle, with its artistically devised scenes, and its beautifully handled story of the Messiah, I was especially impressed by the note of earnestness and sincerity which seemed to inspire its throngs upon the stage that even a matter-of-fact New York audience was held in a spell of reverence as if realizing for the first time the true import of the greatest of all human dramas, enacted in Palestine over nineteen centuries ago.

It is a presentation not merely for one creed or one faith. It may be seen and enjoyed by both Jew and Gentile, Catholic and Protestant, for after all, its lesson is for humanity, and its dramatic appeal is as sure as human sympathy itself.

That the Interchurch World Movement should have undertaken to present this great story in its present form, and to do it in so masterly a fashion, is the most hopeful sign of the universal good that can come if the church and stage will only work in friendly alliance.

Let me thank you for a wonderful evening.

Faithfully,
DAVID BELASCO.

MISS MILDRED LEO CLEMENS

Miss Clemens, a cousin of Mark Twain, will bring to Chautauqua audiences a vividly illustrated lecture on "The Pacific Paradise—Hawaii" with the musical setting furnished by a company of native Hawaiian singers and players brought direct from Honolulu, where Miss Clemens went on a special trip to secure them last April.

—o—

CLEMENS' NATIVE HAWAIANS

"Their music haunts me" said Mark Twain, on his return from the Hawaiian Islands. "It fills me with the spell of its woodland solitude." You can hear this same fascinating music at Chautauqua when Miss Clemens and her native Hawaiians give their delightful programme.

JESSIE ISABEL CHRISTIAN

A sensational success was scored by Miss Christian of the Chicago Opera Company when called to sing the leading role in the opera "Les Huguenots," substituting for Miss Amelia Galli-Curci, whom the audience had come to hear. Since then she has sung many important roles of her own in Chicago Opera Company productions.

Press Comments in Chautauqua Towns.

Below are given some of the comments of the Canadian and American Press:

"Never before has a community project appealed to all sorts and conditions as has Chautauqua."

"Nothing in recent years has been so conducive to the public good as the week of unalloyed pleasure and entertainment that has just closed."

"It is apparent that our people have come to appreciate what Chautauqua means, and the possibilities it offers for the enjoyment of music, the inspiration that may be gained through the lectures, and the uplift that comes through these and the other forms of entertainment."

"The interest aroused and the profound impression that the lectures have made, have done more than anything else in the history of the town."

"The music, the lectures, and even the fun presented from the Chautauqua platform, bore the Chautauqua message of cheer and a higher and broader life."

"The bringing together of the people of the town in the common cause of the Chautauqua idea has perhaps been one of the most valuable features connected with it. It has fostered the 'get together' spirit as nothing else has done."

"It has brought about an intermingling of town and country people that is good for the whole community. It has provided high class entertainment at a marvelously low price to our people for a whole week."

WAS ASTONISHED AT THE CHANGE

Had Suffered for Two Years—Gains New Strength and Courage After Taking Tanlac

"I am glad to give you this testimonial for Tanlac has done so much for me," said Mrs. Alphonse Clontier, of 181 Victoria street, Quebec, to a Tanlac representative recently.

"For two years previous to taking this wonderful medicine," she continued, "I was in a very weakened state as the result or indigestion and a disordered stomach. The very least thing in the way of heavy food caused me great distress. Bitter liquid come up into my mouth and the gas would press against my heart and lungs so as to cause palpitation and shortness of breath. I used to get awfully low spirited and at night I could not sleep. Many a time I have spent a whole night without closing an eye and the next morning I would be in a state of utter collapse. I tried many medicines without getting any relief and my weakness was getting greater every day.

"I heard Tanlac being praised by so many people that I decided to try a bottle myself. I am now finishing my second bottle and the change that has taken place in my health is really astonishing. I never would have believed it possible for two bottles of Tanlac to do so much. It has relieved me of all my stomach trouble, and I can eat anything I want without the least bit of trouble afterwards. The gas has quit forming and I am no longer troubled with heart palpitation or the shortnes of breath. My sleep is now restful and unbroken and in the mornings I get up feeling fine and ready to do my housework. I have regained my energy and courage and can truthfully say that my health is better today than it ever was. My aged mother is also taking Tanlac and has derived great comfort and benefit from its use. I cannot recommend this medicine too highly, and I hope this statement will lead others who suffer as I did from general weakness and a disordered stomach to try Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

The Referendum Vote.

On account of representations made through various organizations in Ontario, the government has decided to postpone the date for holding the referendum vote in the Province of Ontario until Monday, April 8th, 1921, in order to permit of revision of Ontario provincial voters' lists. The date originally set for taking the vote in Ontario was October 25th next. The present postponement has become necessary in order that Ontario voters' lists may be thoroughly revised and brought up to date before the vote is taken. It was pointed out that the provincial lists in Ontario were by no means satisfactory, and that if they were used for the purpose of a referendum vote the result would be the disqualification of a very large number of electors, and particularly of returned soldiers. Various organizations in Ontario objected to the use of these lists for the referendum vote without revision.

WOMEN WANT TO KNOW ABOUT MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE

It is a healthy sign of the intelligent interest our women are taking in public issues when our members begin to write Tidings for information. The following letter has come to hand:

I am taking the liberty of writing you re Woman Suffrage in Municipalities. We find that, as yet, married women do not know how to avail themselves of the privilege of the ballot in municipal elections. Neither do many men know that their wives can vote on the same property by being made joint owners. A Deputy Returning Officer almost refused a member of our union a ballot, being ignorant of the law. Will you kindly write editorially of this matter in Tidings? The Unions can then have it copied into the local papers and discuss municipal enfranchisement at meetings with the object of getting both men and women enlightened on this subject."

The municipal franchise is a more complicated matter than either the federal franchise or the provincial franchise, the latter two having no property qualifications. Property owners to the amount of $400 in cities are assessed, and of course have a vote. If husband and wife are joint owners of property in a city to the amount of $800 each has a vote.

If a husband and wife are joint tenants of property in a city to the amount of $800 each has a vote.

Property owners in towns of over 3,000 population, to the amount of $300 are assessed and have a vote. If husband and wife in such a municipality are joint owners of a property to the amount of $600 each has a vote, and if joint tenatns of a property valued at $600 each has a vote.

Property owners in a town under 3,000 population, to the amount of $200 have a vote. If husband and wife in such a municipality are joint owners to the amount of $400 each has a vote, and if joint tenants of property to the amount of $200 each has a vote. A man or woman assessed in any municipality for an assessed income of $400 or over has a vote.

Carolyn of the Corners

By RUTH BELMORE ENDICOTT

(Copyright, 1918, by Dodd, Mead & Company, Inc.)

She started with the dog on his leash, for he was not muzzled. The bag became heavy very soon, but she staggered along with it uncomplainingly. Her disheveled appearance, with the bag and the dog, gave people who noticed her the impression that Carolyn May had been away, perhaps, for a "round-the" vacation, and was now coming home, hungry and weary, to her expectant family.

But Carolyn May knew that she was coming home to an empty apartment—to rooms that echoed with her mother's voice and in which lingered only memories of her father's cheery spirit.

Yet it was the only home, she felt, that was left for her.

She could not blame Uncle Joe and Miss Amanda for forgetting her. Aunty Rose had been quite disturbed, too, since the forest fire. She had given the little girl no hint that provision would be made for her future.

Wearily, Carolyn May traveled through the Harlem streets, shifting the bag from hand to hand, Prince pacing sedately by her side.

"We're getting near home now, Princey," she told him again and again.

Thus she tried to keep her heart up. She came to the corner near which she had lived so long and Prince suddenly sniffed at the screened door of a shop.

"Of course, poor fellow! That's the butcher's," Carolyn May said.

She bought a penny afternoon paper on a news stand and then went into the shop and got a sickle's worth of bones and scraps for the dog. The clerk did not know her, for he was a new man.

They ventured along their block. The children all seemed strange to Carolyn May. But people move so frequently in Harlem that this was not at all queer. She hoped to see Edna or some other little girl with whom she had gone to school. But not until she reached the very house itself did anybody hail her.

"Oh, Carolyn May! Is that you?"

A lame boy was looking through the iron fence of the areaway. He was the janitor's son.

"Oh, Johnny! I'm real glad to see you!" cried the little girl. Then she added more slowly, "We—we've come home again—me and Prince."

"You've growed a lot, Carolyn May," said the boy. "My pop and mom's away."

"I'll go up into Edna's flat, then," the weary little girl sighed.

"The Prices have gone away, too. They won't be back till tomorrow sometime."

"Oh!" murmured Carolyn May.

"But, say, I can get the keys to your flat. The water's turned on, too. Everything's all right up there, for Mrs. Price she sweeps and dusts it all every once in a while. Shall I get the keys?"

"Oh, if you will, please!" returned the relieved child.

The boy hobbled away, but soon returned with the outer-door key and the key to the apartment itself. Carolyn May took them and thanked him. Then she gladly went in and climbed the two flights to their floor.

She saw nobody and easily let herself into the flat. It had been recently aired and dusted. Every piece of furniture stood just as she remembered it.

"Oh, Princey, it's home!" she whispered. "This is our real, real home! I—I loved 'em all at The Corners; but it wasn't like this there!"

Prince perhaps agreed, but he was too deeply interested in snuffling at the package of meat scraps she had purchased for his supper to reply.

"Well, well, Prince," she said, "you shall have it at once."

Dropping the bag in the private hall, she went into the kitchen and stood on tiptoe to open the door of the closet above the dresser. Securing a plate, she emptied the contents of the paper into it and set the plate down on the floor.

In spreading out the paper she saw some big-type headlines on the front page:

ROMANCE OF THE GREAT WAR

The Experiences of This Newspaper Man Like Those of a Character in a Novel—Lost for Eight Months in the Desert—At the Mercy of Semi-savage Tribes, Man and Wife Escape at Last to Return in Safety and Health.

His Story Told to Beacon Reporter at Quarantine.

Carolyn May read no further. It did not particularly interest the little girl. Besides, she was very tired—too tired to think of her own supper. Had she read on, however, even her simple mind might have been startled by the following paragraphs printed below the heading of this startling story:

Their wonderful good fortune in escaping from the disaster that overtook the steamer on which they traveled and which was caught between the gunfire of a French battleship and two of a Turkish squadron can only be equaled by the chance which followed. Naturally, as a journalist himself, Mr. Cameron is prepared to tell the details of his remarkable adventure in the columns of the Beacon at a later date.

The boat in which they left the sinking Dunraven was separated in the night and fog from that of the other refugees and was carried by the current far to the south. In fact, they were enveloped by fog until they landed upon a stretch of deserted beach.

There was no town near, nor even an encampment of Arabs. But soon after their disembarkation and before the officer in command could take means to communicate with any civilized, or semi-civilized, place a party of mounted and armed tribesmen swooped down on the castaways.

These people, being Mohammedans, and having seen the battle the day before between the French and the Turks, considered the castaways enemies and swept them away with them into the desert to a certain oasis, where for nearly eight months Mr. John Lewis Cameron and his wife and the other refugees from the Dunraven were kept without being allowed to communicate with their friends.

Mr. Cameron was on furlough from his paper because of ill health. At the beginning of his captivity he was in a very bad way, indeed, it is said. But the months in the hot, dry atmosphere of the desert have made a new man of him, and he personally cannot hold much rancor against the Mohammedan tribe that held him a prisoner.

There was more of the wonderful story, but the sleepy little girl had given it no attention whatsoever. Prince had eaten and lain down in his familiar corner. The little girl had gone softly into her own room and made up her bed as she had seen her mother and Mrs. Price make it.

Then she turned on the water in the bathtub and took a bath. It was delightful to have a real tub instead of the galvanized bucket they used at Uncle Joe's.

She put on her nightgown at last, knelt and said her prayer, including that petition she had never left out of it since that first night she had knelt at Aunty Rose's knee:

"God bless my papa and mamma and bring them safe home."

The faith that moves mountains was in that prayer.

Carolyn May slept the sleep of the wearied if not of the carefree. The noises of the street did not disturb her, not even the passing of the fire-department trucks some time after midnight.

Nor did nearer sounds arouse her. She had no knowledge of the fact that a procession of A. D. T. boys and messengers from the railroad company came to ring the bell of the Price's apartment. Later the janitor's family was aroused, but the little lame boy thought it would be better for him to say nothing about having seen Carolyn May and of having given her the keys.

So when in the early morning a taxicab stopped at the street door and a bushy-haired, trouble-looking man got out and helped a woman clad in brown to the sidewalk the janitor had no knowledge of the fact that Carolyn May and Prince were upstairs in the apartment that had been so long empty.

"And the Prices are away," said Uncle Joe in a troubled voice. "What do you think of that, Mandy?"

"Oh, Joe! where could the dear child have gone?"

"I haven't seen her," declared the janitor. "But I can let you into the flat. There's been lots of telegrams to Mr. Price in the night—and they weren't all yours. You're Carolyn May's uncle, ain't you?" he asked Mr. Stagg.

Uncle Joe acknowledged the relationship. "Let's go upstairs," he said to Amanda. "Now that I'm here—"

"Oh, dear, Joe!" almost wept Amanda, "could anything have happened to her in this big city?"

"Most anything, I s'pose," growled Joseph Stagg, following close on the janitor's heels.

The janitor's passkey grating in the lock of the private hall door startled something that none of them expected. A startling bark echoed in the rooms which were supposed to be empty.

"Whatever is that?" gasped the janitor.

"It's Prince! It's her dog!" shouted Uncle Joe.

"The child is here!" cried Amanda Parlow, and she was the first to enter the apartment.

Prince bounded wildly to meet her. He leaped and barked. A cry sounded from a room beyond. Miss Amanda and Uncle Joe rushed in.

Sleepily, her face flushed, rubbing her blue eyes wide open, Carolyn May sat up in bed.

"Oh, Uncle Joe! Oh, Miss Amanda!" she said. "I—I was just dreaming my own papa and mamma had come home and found me here."

"My dear! My dear!" sobbed Amanda Parlow, dropping to her knees beside the bed.

"You're a great young one!" growled Uncle Joe, blowing his nose suspiciously. "You've nigh about scared ev'body to death. Your Aunty Rose is almost crazy."

"Oh—I'm sorry," stammered Carolyn May. "But—you—see—— Uncle Joe! You and Miss Amanda are going to be happy now. Aunty Rose says 'two is comp'ny.' So you wouldn't have room for me."

"Bless me!" gasped the hardware dealer. "What do you know about this child's feeling that way, Mandy?"

"I am afraid we have been selfish, Joe," the woman said, sighing. "And that is something that Carolyn May has never been in her life!"

"I dunno—I dunno," said Uncle Joe ruefully and looking at the little, flower-like face of the child. "How about Aunty Rose? How d'you s'pose she feels about Hannah's Carlyn running away?"

"Oh!" ejaculated the little girl.

"It may be that 'two's company and three's a crowd,' but you and Aunty Rose would be two likewise, wouldn't you, Carlyn May?"

"I—I never thought of that, Uncle Joe," the child whispered.

"Why, your running away from The Corners this way is like to make both Mandy and me unhappy, as well as Aunty Rose. I—I don't b'lieve Mandy could get married at all if she didn't have a little girl like you to carry flowers and hold up her train. How about it, Mandy?"

"That is quite true, Carolyn May," declared Miss Amanda, hugging the soft little body of the child tightly again.

"Why, I—I—"

Carolyn May was for once beyond verbal expression. Besides there was a noise in the outer hall and on the stairway. The door had been left open by the surprised janitor.

A burst of voices came into the apartment. Uncle Joe turned wonderingly. Miss Amanda stood up. Carolyn May flew out of bed with a shriek that startled them both.

"My papa! My mamma! I hear them! They're not drowned! God didn't let 'em be lost in the sea!"

She was out of the room in her nightgown, pattering in bare feet over the floor. A brown man, with a beard and twinkling blue eyes, caught her up in his strong arms and hugged her swiftly—safely—to his breast.

Caught Her Up in His Strong Arms and Hugged Her.

"Snuggy!" he said chokingly. "Papa's Snuggy!"

"My baby! My baby!" cried the woman at whom Joseph Stagg was staring as though he believed her to be the ghost of his lost sister Hannah.

It was several hours later before a really sane thing was said or a sane thing done in that little Harlem flat.

"It's like a lovely fairy story!" cried Carolyn May. "Only it's better than a fairy story—it's real!"

"Yes, yes, it's real, thank God!" murmured the happy mother.

"And I'm never going away from my little girl again," added the father, kissing her for at least the tenth time.

"But what Aunty Rose is going to do I don't see," said Uncle Joe, shaking his head with real commiseration. "I've sent her a dispatch saying that the child is safe. But if we go back without Hannah's Carlyn—"

"The poor soul!" said his sister. "I can believe that in her secret, subdued way Aunty Rose Kennedy is entirely wrapped up in Carolyn May. She will suffer if they are separated for long—and so abruptly."

"That's true," Miss Amanda said gently. "And Joe will feel it, too."

"I bet I will," agreed Joseph Stagg. "But I have you, Mandy. Aunty Rose isn't going to have anybody. And for her to go back alone into her old house—for she won't stay with us, of course—" he shook his head dolefully.

"Let us write to Aunty Rose," said Hannah Cameron briskly. "We want her here. Why, of course we do! Don't we, Carolyn May?"

"Why!" cried the child delightedly, "that's just the way out of it, isn't it? Oh! how nice things do come about in this world, don't they? Aunty Rose shall come here. You'll like her ever so much, papa. And Prince will be glad to have her come, for she always has treated Princey real well."

Prince, who had been standing by with his ears cocked, yawned, whined and lay down with a sigh, as though considering the matter quite satisfactorily settled.

Carolyn May, having climbed up into her father's arms, reached out and drew her mother close beside her.

THE END.

Curious Pottery.

The use of dried fruits of trees, such as the gourd and the cocoanut, for holding water and liquid substances, is familiar, but it is not so generally known that cups, saucers and jars to take the place of ordinary earthenware are made in the Orient of a gluttinous and plastic material entirely of vegetable origin, which is easily moulded and dried.

There is more than one instance in history of vegetable matter being confused with earth and clay. The pulpy parts of various astringent fruits have the peculiar plastic property of clay, and by hardening in pots, they are impervious to water, and have the additional advantage that they can fall to the ground without being broken.

There is a peculiar ware that is made by the Banjaras in the Central Provinces of India from the fruit of the aoula. The fruit is collected and dried. It is then boiled in water until quite soft and pounded, the stones removed and the pulp beaten up and worked with the hands into a thick, brown, sticky mass. When this is quite ready the manufacturer takes an earthen vessel—any shape that pleases him—and covers it all over with a thick layer or coat of the pulp. This is then put aside to set a bit, and when hard rude devices are stamped round the neck and shoulders of the article, which is then set aside to dry. When entirely hard the gharra inside is broken and the pieces removed. These vegetable pots are sold according to size from four to eight annas each, and are much sought after by the people.

The aoula tree is abundant throughout the forests of tropical India and Burma, and the fruits are frequently employed in medicine and for tanning.

No Return of the Trouble Since Taking "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

MR. JOHN E. GUILDERSON

P. O. Box 128, Parrsboro, N. S.

"I suffered with Rheumatism for five years, having it so badly at times I was unable to get up without assistance. I tried different medicines I saw advertised and was treated by doctors in Amherst, also in my home town, but the Rheumatism came back.

In 1916, I saw in an advertisement that 'Fruit-a-tives' would stop Rheumatism, and took one box and got relief; then I took them right along for about six months and the Rheumatism was all gone and I have never felt it since.

Anyone who would care to write me as regards 'Fruit-a-tives' I would be glad to tell them what 'Fruit-a-tives' did for me."

INVENTED STRANGE CANNON.

It Will Be Open at Both Ends —Increases Speed of Gases.

In the course of experiments in the last two years made in an effort to produce a cannon that would fire a shell about sixty miles M. Delamare-Maze built a gun that upsets all preconceived ideas about artillery, and F. Honore describes this in L'Illustration (Paris).

Hitherto a cannon has been looked upon as a tube open at one end, in the interior of which a charge of powder is burned in a way that will impinon the gases as hermetically as possible in the tube, in order to get the maximum force of expansion at work behind the projectile. Cannons are made very long, so that an ever-increasing force may propel the projectile until the moment it issues from the muzzle. M. Delamare-Maze makes a cannon open at both ends.

In this strange cannon the tube and the breech part are separate and remain apart even at the moment of firing. The combustion chamber is narrowed at its forward end and its external diameter is slightly less than that of the bore of the barrel on the gun, so that when pushed together they escape touching by only a few millimetres. The charge is placed in the chamber through the breach, the tube is drawn forward and the projectile inserted, then the tube is drawn back.

When the gases of explosion expand they exert their force upon the projectile and are turned back by it to escape through the space which separates the two parts. This backward rush produces a force contrary to the recoil, which is added to the propulsive force acting upon the projectile.

M. Honore points out that this is similar in principle to the action of a turbine, which consists in substituting speed for pressure. Instead of the pressure of the steam acting upon a piston, the steam is driven directly and constantly against the vanes of a wheel. This method turns the wheel more rapidly than can be done with a piston, but the power generated is not sensibly greater, for the quantity of energy furnished by one pound of steam or one pound of gas at a certain temperature is always the same, and the power can be increased only by diminishing the wastage.

The new cannon increases the speed of the gases of explosion, but, on the other hand, it permits them to act upon the projectile for a briefer time than is the case with those in an ordinary cannon, so it is questionable whether there is really any gain.

In experiments at Mont Valerien the new cannon, with a calibre of 75 millimetres, fired a projectile weighing 5.35 kilograms at a muzzle velocity of 518 metres a second with a charge of 1,100 grams; of 662 metres a second with one of 1,200 grams, and of 584 metres a second with one of 1,250 grams. Now the old French 75 fires a projectile weighing 7.24 kilograms at a muzzle velocity of 529 metres with a charge of 690 grams.

The French Ministry of War is paying the expenses of further experiments.

What's In a Name?

Is there any more confusing nomenclature than that employed in agriculture? A "bullock" is a kind of general term applied to cattle in the South-west of England, and even bulls and cows are included, so that if one sees "grand Devon bullocks" advertised for sale the conclusion must not be hastily formed that these are steers of superior quality. In Scotland, and generally, save in the southwest, bullocks are steers, or, in the vernacular of the north, stots or stirks. Heifers become queys in Scotland, but the latter term is unknown in England. More perplexing, however, is the designation of a one-year-old female sheep. It is generally known as a gimmer or shearling ewe. In Lincolnshire it becomes a she hogg or threave, and in some parts of the country the term hogg and hoggets are used. The ram lambs are tup lambs in many districts, and either lamb is a term which is only known in the South of England. The use of "he" and "she" as prefixes is peculiarly English. The ewes as they advance in age are known as two tooth, four tooth, and six tooth ewes, full mouthed, and latterly broken mouthed. What's in a name? To the uninstructed there may be confusion.

SWORDS.

They Were Once an Indication of Rank.

In old Japan—at a period, indeed, no further back than our Confederation—every nobleman maintained a personal guard of two-armed men-at-arms. The higher his rank, the greater the number of these followers. If a daimio, he had a standing army of his own.

It was a feudal age. But the revolution of 1868 totally demolished the system and 400,000 two-sworded professional fighters lost their jobs. Thereafter they were forbidden by law to carry swords; and when Japan was fairly opened to foreigners, those weapons found their way to the curio shops.

Different causes brought about a like situation in China, where the mandarin of to-day goes about with an umbrella instead of carrying the sword of his grandsire. Thus great numbers of Chinese swords, many of them exquisite works of art, have come into the possession of foreign devils with an enthusiasm for collecting.

We have read a good deal about the famous swordmakers of Milan, of Toledo and of Damascus, but their rivalry was mild compared with that of the old Japanese and Chinese experts in this art. The armorers of Nippon formed the richest and most powerful guild in the Orient. So keen was the competition among the swordmakers they produced inventions the secrets of which are unknown to ourselves to-day.

The steel they made was wonderful. They knew how to make sword blades with tints of violet, blue, green, silver and gold. Swords like that of Saladin, which could cut through a veil or a sofa cushion, or like that of Richard Coeur de Lion, which could sever a bar of iron at a blow, might have been duplicated in a hundred shops in the days of the shogunate and the eighteenth century mandarins.

Some of the blades bore figures of flowers and leaves or Oriental characters, the effect being the same as that produced by the "magic mirrors" of Japan—the tracery now visible, and again invisible — though nobody knew how the thing was done. Many of these old Chinese and Japanese swords are poisoned (so that it is well to handle them cautiously), the favorite method adopted for the purpose being to dip the blade in decayed human blood.

Those were times when the eastern seas were beset by Chinese and Japanese pirates, whose favorite weapon was a slashing digger that resembled in shape the ace of spades, fastened into a wire-bound handle. The business end of another had the form of the ace of diamonds, ornamented with red lacquer to represent spots of blood. These daggers were effective not only at close quarters, being throwa, when occasion served, with fatal precision.

The Ex-Kaiser In Exile.

"Wilhelm of Amerongen is a sick man, with a beard and no ambition," writes Mr. James Dunn in the London Magazine. "Nine months in a mediaeval moated castle, with a 'Court' restricted to half a dozen fading satellites, and a domain limited to a rose garden, have dimmed the lustre of the ex-Kaiser's personality, and in the podgy man, with the tired eyes and the flabby, sallow cheeks, it is difficult to recognize the once all-powerful autocrat whose vanity lost him a throne, and whose ambition convulsed a world. But the ruling passion is strong even in exile, and Wilhelm's vanity prompts him to ape the king, though he has failed to play the part.

"Every evening he summons the village barber to brush his hair, train his moustache, and trim his Vandyke beard; and then, wearing one of his gorgeous military uniforms, he descends to dinner, a solemn meal ordered with the ceremonial etiquette of past Court glories at Potsdam. From half-past six till half-past ten the ex-kaiser seeks to recapture something of his lost grandeur, and in the illusion of his egotism he really imagines that he is still a supreme being endowed with the divine right. It is Wilhelm's twilight of madness, and out of sheer pity his bored guests minister to his weakness.

"When he is playing the king, Wilhelm forces the conversation. Wishing to reveal what he considers to be his remark like versatility, he discusses many subjects, from poetry to tobacco-growing, and as he talks he moves restlessly from seat to seat, occasionally throwing all his weight on the slender arms of the Chippendale chairs, with the result that stronger furniture has been provided in the dining-room of Castle Bentinck."

No Fourth Needed.

A patient who sent for the doctor, remarked that "he had not the slightest faith in modern medical science." "That doesn't matter in the least," replied the doctor. "You see, a mule has no faith in the veterinary surgeon, and yet he cures him all the same."

FRITZ IN ALGECIRAS.

Spanish City Is Bridgehead to African Railways.

Fritz is waiting. For a golden opportunity. There are more fortunes to be made in Madrid, the city with a future, than even during the meteor rise of Berlin. Therefore Fritz is in Madrid.

And there are others waiting in Algeciras, the future bridge-head to the African railway system. Therefore Fritz, several of him, has taken up his abode in an inn opposite the dusty harbor station.

Fourteen years ago the kaiser's delegates at the Algeciras conference, having looked hungrily for weeks toward the African headlands opposite, finally informed the spoiled child of Europe that he could not have all he wanted. France and other people had friends as well as rights. Then the kaiser determined finally upon war.

Now, until she comes against into the political limelight, Algeciras takes a siesta in her wonderful sunshine, and fashionable British and Indian rendezvous in the Reina Cristina hotel, which to my knowledge has no counterpart in Europe and perhaps scarcely any on the habitable globe.

Here in the glorious gardens over the bay, one glow of myrtnd arums and white iris and roses and flowers I cannot even name, miracle-workers, the people who make the spells, take a rest. It is a country house and a country club together, and it looks across its terraced gardens toward Gibraltar and to the African mainland.

Algeciras is an English discovery served from Bobadilla junction by an English railway company and a resting place for many whose daily round for weeks on end is upon the rock opposite.

Ronda of balcony fame, up in the hills, was perhaps never as good as it used to be. It is Tivoli without its ifs—trees, temple and (alas!) now torrent.

But Algeciras was never so good as it is. At sundown great white birds settle in flocks upon one tall tree in the garden and turn it into a snow pillar, and at sunrise the faint scent comes up to my bedroom window from an orange tree in fruit and flower, the same that was brought here in fruit overnight to please an English lady who wanted to "wake among oranges."

Along the cliff edge towards "Sandy Cove," where adorable English children are paddling in the sun, there is a carpet of blue freesia, edged with scarlet vetch and fringed with asphodel, while the flowering broom throws dashes of almost violet gold into the color scheme.

Down by the sleepy port dusty strings of donkeys pick their way over the cobbles (donkeys are dainty steppers), laden and overladen with piles of cork from the forest, while babies of 5 to 7 tango, and tango well, in the street to the drone of a barrel organ.

How on earth can they do it in the sun, and, where do they pick up the steps?—Charles Tower, in the London Mail.

Love a Disease.

"In the spring a young man's fancy"—and so forth.

But what is this thing called "love" which upsets folks so?

It has nothing to do with the affections, in the ordinary sense of the term. Psychologists are inclined to regard it as a nervous disorder.

Two young people meet. If total strangers, or only slightly acquainted, they are much more likely to "fall in love" than if long and intimately associated. If they do so, the affections are not concerned; it is simply an attack of the mating fever.

When once love is recognized as a psychic phenomenon affecting the whole nervous system, the chief centre of which is the brain, it is possible to understand the aberrations of intelligence shown by sufferers and the absurd performances in which they indulge.

A person in love is a victim of hallucinations. He (or she) sees in the object of their affections [illegible]

Explorers in early days [illegible] ways of the sexes to account for [illegible] ties, such as giants, pygmies, people with tails. Above all they were anxious to discover the fabled amazons, which were said to combine both sexes in one individual.

The real androgyns are everyday boys and girls, who up to the age of eleven or twelve are much alike physically and in effect neuters. A boy of nine or ten does not throw a ball well; instead of striking out with his fists he pounds his adversary or pulls hair; his voice is like that of a girl.

Soon afterward there are striking transformations, differentiating the sexes, which begin almost suddenly to look upon one another from a new angle. With sex differentiations comes sex attraction and before long symptoms of the mating fever are liable to manifest themselves.

An essential element of a passion is transitoriness. It passes. Thus two people who fall desperately in love may find themselves desperately unhappy in marriage. In selecting a mate they have used emotion in place of jud— " "

THE HANDLING OF BEES

Practical Hints About Bees and Honey-Making.

Preparations for Wintering Over—Spring Examination Important—June Is Swarming Month — How to Avoid Too Early Extracting.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE beekeeper's year may be said to begin in September at the close of the honey season. Supers are then removed and colonies are examined for queen condition. Queenless colonies should be united with those which have queens, particularly with weak colonies such as light swarms which may have young queens. At present prices of honey and sugar it does not pay to attempt to winter any but the best colonies as swarms of bees can be purchased from the Southern States to arrive in May and give as good a crop of honey as an average colony wintered over.

After supers have been removed in September each colony should be fed a sufficient amount of syrup made of two parts granulated sugar to one of water to bring its supply of feed up to 35 or 40 pounds. This feeding may be done about the first of October.

Hives may be placed in boxes for outdoor wintering before or after feeding at the convenience of the beekeeper, but winter packing should be applied before settled cold weather. For cellar wintering, hives should be placed in the cellar at freezing up time in November, care being taken the operation if possible a cold day immediately following a spell of warm weather. When properly prepared according to some method similar to those described in Bulletin 256 on "The Wintering of Bees in Ontario," outdoor wintered bees require no attention from the time the feeding and packing is completed until the following April. The bee-cellar should be watched for any regulation of temperature and ventilation when changes of weather occur.

The successful wintering of bees depends on having good colonies of young bees, young queens, plenty of good stores, hives warmly packed and ample protection from cold winds.

On the first warm days of April colonies should be removed from cellars and all should be examined to detect queenless ones or those short of stores. The former should be united with those having queens and the latter given extra feed. It would not be wise to make a thorough examination for disease until the weather is warmer than it usually is in April. Early in May when favorable weather arrives queens should be clipped and the matter of stores given attention. At queen-clipping time the brood should be inspected carefully for infectious diseases as described in Bulletin 213, "Bee Diseases in Ontario."

The supering of strong colonies will begin during fruit bloom and outdoor wintered bees may be unpacked soon after. In a backward spring the unpacking may be left until early in June. The beekeeper's main duty in May is to get queens clipped as stated and see that each colony develops properly or is given room to check swarming impulse as the case may be.

June is the swarming month and time of supering for the main honey flow which begins between the 10th and 20th of the month, depending on the season and the latitude. Be sure to give supers enough to avoid any crowding, which may cause the bees to become discouraged, quit work and swarm excessively. It should be the beekeeper's aim to prevent swarming as much as possible. This is done by keeping young queens, giving plenty of room and a systematic examination of brood-chambers to detect colonies which are preparing to swarm. When queen cells are found far advanced they should all be destroyed and the queen herself removed. After the honey has been queenless one week the combs should again be examined and all cells except one removed. This one will provide them with a queen and if only one is left they will not swarm again. Where an improvement of stock is desired the new queen may be given instead of leaving one queen cell.

Natural swarms should be hived on the old stand after removing the parent colony to one side. The swarms should be given the supers from the old colony. New swarms work with great vigor because they have no brood to care for during the first week. Colonies held together without swarming gather more honey than those allowed to swarm. It also cause the beekeeper less trouble at unexpected times. It is the beekeepers' patriotic duty to reduce the cost of honey production and thus increase the quantity he is called to produce as greatly as possible. This may be done more by swarm prevention than in any other way. Bulletin 233 takes this matter up thoroughly and should be carefully studied by all beekeepers.

Most of our best honey is gathered during late June and early July. None of this should be extracted until near the end of July when the bees are nearly through gathering light honey. It might be necessary to give each colony from two to four extracting supers to avoid crowding. By doing this we get a much better ripened honey, also economize a beekeeper's time and maintain much greater public confidence in honey as a staple food.

Colonies which have not been requeened by natural swarming or by swarm control methods in June or July should be attended to in August as best results are usually obtained from queens not more than one year old.—Provincial Apiarist, O. A. College, Guelph.

Couldn't Be Worse.

He was one of those fellows who thought he could do anything, an opinion shared by none of his friends.

"I can't decide whether to go in for painting or poetry," he remarked one evening to the young lady he bored with his vain chatter.

"I'd go in for painting if I were you," replied the girl.

"Then you've seen some of my paintings?"

"Oh, no!" she told him cruelly. "But I've heard some of your poetry!"

Nature's Mirror

When a woman is well and healthy—there's a sparkle in her eyes, a rose tint in her cheeks, and she has rich red blood. After taking nature's tonic which Dr. Pierce called "Favorite Prescription," there's elasticity in every movement and a spring in her step. Love comes to every woman who has bounding health—but when she is pallid, dull eyed, languid, she has no magnetism nor does she appeal to any man.

SAVED A LIFE

Elmira, Ont.—"I have a very kind feeling for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for it once saved my mother's life. When going through middle age her health failed very fast; she suffered with pain in her head and backache, in fact, she had pains and aches all through her body. She lost weight, was very nervous, would become dizzy and at times faint and fall wherever she chanced to be. This necessitated our watching her all the time, we dared not leave her alone. She was as miserable as one could be and live. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was recommended to her. She took six bottles and was completely restored to good health."—MRS. B. E. UPTHEGROVE, Box 223.

Setting Stone Fruits.

Of all fruit trees only apples should be shaped in the fall, and even with the apple sprouts only in a cursory satisfactory, according to the Department of Horticulture at the Ohio Experiment Station.

Cherry and peach trees planted in the fall are quite likely to be killed or injured by winter freezing.

Trees set in the fall do not have a chance to become established, and hence are much more liable to winter injury than trees that have passed through one growing season.

It is also pointed out that there is not much advantage in fall planting over spring planting, for the trees may be headed in nursery row and kept in good shape during winter time.

Some orchard growers use dynamite to blast out the holes for trees. This is regarded as especially desirable only in soils underlaid with an impervious hardpan or those in which their compactness makes digging slow and difficult. The dynamite should be used only when the ground is dry. When the soil is filled with water the explosion of the dynamite forms a jug-shaped cavity about the size of a barrel in which the soil is not loose.

When the tree is planted the settling of the loose soil allows the tree to drop considerably deeper than they should be set.

Soak the Lawn.

Many do not know how to use water in irrigating their lawns and gardens. Good farmers have often been heard to remark that a shower of half an inch or less would just as well not have fallen for all the good it did. There is much truth in this. The feeding of roots of plants is mainly some little distance below the surface of the ground. A light application of water may not penetrate sufficiently to be of any use to the plants. Sprinkling the lawn usually comes under this class. One good thorough soaking per week is of infinitely more value than a sprinkling every day. A little water, like a little knowledge, may be a dangerous thing in that it might have a tendency to cause shallow rooting of the plants, thereby making them less able to withstand a period of drought.

Beef Rings.

One noticeable feature in the Ontario live stock situation is seen in the case of beef rings. While some of these rings are as active as ever, a number are reported as having gone out of business. One township in the eastern half of the province that was covered with "rings" twenty years ago is said to have not a third of the old number left. The difficulty in securing a killer and the objection to spending the time necessary to go after the weekly supply of fresh meat are given as the chief reasons. Another reason is that some of the carcasses have had to be destroyed because of tuberculosis, and difficulty has been found, where this occurred, in finding a suitable animal at the moment. In several cases farmers now kill a summer hog and share up with their neighbors, receiving their return when the neighbors kill. In other cases, with households smaller than formerly, because of help scarcity, they find it more satisfactory to buy such beef as they want than to belong to a ring.

U. S. Cattle Imports.

In 1919 United States cattle imports, mainly from Canada and Mexico, numbered 642,000, with a value of fifty-three million dollars, double the imports of one and two years ago.

Thin Fruit After "Drop."

Thinning of fruit is sometimes necessary with apples, peaches and plums to insure the production of the highest quality of fruit, according to the horticultural department of the Ohio Experiment Station.

In some years the June drop of fruit removes about the right quantity, but at other times its is necessary to thin fruit by hand to prevent the trees from breaking down and to insure well-colored fruit.

For thinning apples it has been found that the best time is between four and eight weeks after full bloom. Small shears or the thumb and fingers may be used to clip off the excess fruit.

With peaches and plums, thinning lessens the danger from rot and keeps the trees from breaking. On peach trees a distance of six inches may be made between fruits.

HAND-MADE LINGERIE

Sheer Garments, Tucked and Embroidered, Are Cosily.

Factory Work, When Hundreds Are Cut at One Time, Results in Great Saving.

If it is a hand-made affair of sheer pink linen, with a few tiny tucks and perhaps a simple edge of hand crochet you pay a good price for it because one person has made it—by hand. If it is an elaborate affair of pink batiste or voile trimmed with lace insertion and edging and made by machine, perhaps a dozen people have worked on it—yet you pay considerably less for it. That seems queer, does it not? But the distinction of the linen chemise lies in its hand-made quality and in its material —fine, soft linen which is a bit of a luxury but the smartest fabric now for lingerie garments.

Have you ever been in one of the factories where machine made undergarments are turned out? Big, bright and—nowadays—beautifully clean places are these factories, and despite the hundreds of people at work and the whir of the busy machines, there is a wonderful order. Your pink batiste and lace chemise was first fashioned by a special worker. She produced it on a special machine from a sketch made by a high-salaried designer. The garment thus produced was called a sample. It went into a class case where it was displayed to buyers who came to select models for the season's business. Before the sample went to the glass case a working pattern was made from it. This working pattern was a chemise cut out of heavy paper and on the paper was sketched the pattern of the lace trimming, with carefully written memorandum of the number of yards of lace required.

The working pattern, or dummy, as it is called, then went to the factory. In a room 200 feet long and half as many feet wide the material for the chemise is piled in layers and layers, and sometimes a hundred or more chemises are cut out at one time with an electric cutter. In another room the yards of lace for the trimming are being cut. Along go the material and trimmings to another department with the dummy sample, and the pink chemise slows along from machine to machine, where busy girls do various kinds of work: Hemming, felling seams, hemstitching, joining lace ruffling, and even sewing on buttons. The final process is the pressing and then the pink chemise is ready to go on its journey to you. Yet all its peregrinations from designer to cutter, to stitching machines, to pressing room have taken less time than it took one worker to make the pink linen chemise by hand!

An Old Prayer.

There was a prayer in the prayer book of Edward VI. which would appear as suitable in Canadian terms at the present juncture. It was found among "Sundry Godly Prayers for Divers Purposes," and entitled "A Prayer for Landlords." It was as follows:

"We heartily pray Thee to send Thy Holy Spirit into the hearts of them that possess the grounds and pastures of the earth, that they, remembering themselves to be Thy tenants, may not rack or stretch out the rents of their houses or lands, nor yet take unreasonable fines or moneys, after the manner of covetous worldlings, but so let them out that the inhabitants thereof may be able to pay the rents and to live and nourish their families and remember the poor. Give them grace also to consider that they are but strangers and pilgrims in this world, having here no dwelling place, but seeking one to come; that they, remembering the short continuance of this life, may be content with that which is sufficient, and not join house to house and land to land, to the impoverishment of others, but so behave themselves in letting their tenements, lands and pastures that after this life they may be received into everlasting habitation."

GOWNS HAVE STRAIGHT LINES

Design of Spring Flapper Outfits Affect Garment From Neck to the Border.

The chic spring fashions for the nifty young flappers are delightfully suggestive of the buoyancy of early youth. The leading flapper gowns have straight lines from the neck to the border, which finishes just below the knee—even at fourteen. Some of the gowns allow a reach to midway between ankle and knee.

Some models in one piece fall straight with a belt on the hip line. This line is defined in other models with a wide long sash that is wonderfully fluffed at the back or right side. The sleeves are elbow length for afternoon gowns. Modest little gowns have sleeves three inches above the wrist. Even caps are seen in some afternoon negligee gowns that are to be worn in the parks, on the beach and at home.

Linen and silk lawn, organdie and swiss muslins are billowed into gowns, with a lot of flying ribbons hitched midst the sweeps of fabric—still these small garments are taut in defining the figure loosely.

The caps are modeled much like those for the "younger set" just ahead of the flappers. Their hats are the sailor, in straw, in fiber, in metal braid. There are turbans and jaunty caps. Low shoes in black and white lead—and the flapper in walking abroad is shod in oxfords and pumps with spring and three-layer heels.

QUILTING ADDS TO BEAUTY

Decorative Scheme Enhances Attractiveness of Cloaks, Coats, Gowns and Millinery.

Along with the gorgeous peacock feather as a distinctive note in decorative schemes for gowns, comes the demure trick of quilting in enhancing the beauty of cloaks, coats, gowns and hats.

Taffeta silks, organdies and almost all seasonable fabrics accept this stitching prettily. It is done in loops, and when used on thin fabrics, a band of wash silk defines the line on the under side. A gown of gray taffeta has side panels done in stitching of the same shade in gray, in a diamond pattern.

These panels are on each side, and between them are two big sunflowers in yellow silk embroidery. The yoke of the waist is quilted, and on the center of the waist are two sunflowers in the embroidery. Hat bands for the sailors are shown in quilted silk and satin. Collars for coats and cloaks are quilted.

The Man-Faced Crab.

One of the most singular-looking creatures that ever walked the earth or "swam the waters under the earth" is the world-famous man-faced crab of Japan. Its body is scarcely an inch in length, and the head is filled with a face which is the counterpart of a Chinese coolie—a veritable missing link, with eyes, nose, and mouth all clearly defined. This curious and uncanny creature, besides the great likeness it bears to a human being in the face, is provided with two legs, which seem to grow from the top of its head and hang down over the sides of its face. Besides these legs, two feelers, each about an inch in length, grow from the chin of the animal, looking for all the world like a forked beard. These man-faced crabs swarm in the inland seas of Japan.

Historic Wrecks.

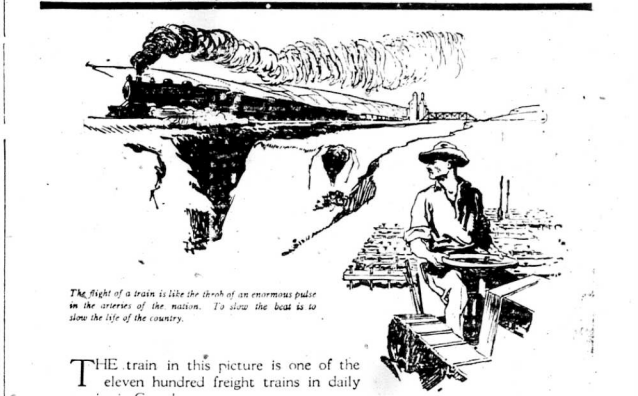
The Kent (Ontario) Historical Society has been given permission to salvage two vessels which formed part of Proctor's fleet and were lost during the retreat of 1813. The vessels are now reported to be lying at the bottom of the Thames river, Kent county, Ontario.

The right of ownership in the vessels and of any other material salvaged is given to the Kent Historical Society, in trust for the Dominion.

One Objection.

Mistress (nervously)—"I do hope the place will suit you."

New Maid—"Well, the house is not bad, and I rather like the look of the policeman on the beat, but if I stay here you'll kindly take them horrible pictures down!"



The flight of a train is like the throb of an enormous pulse in the arteries of the nation. To slow the beat is to slow the life of the country.

THE train in this picture is one of the eleven hundred freight trains in daily service in Canada.

It consists of one heavy-duty freight engine and 45 standard box cars.

It can carry 2,000 tons of wheat.

* * * *

In 1913 its engine could have been built for $34,700—to-day $81,000; its box cars for $1,138.85 each—to-day $3,797.50.

In other words the rolling stock alone in the movement of 2,000 tons of wheat has increased in cost from $85,948.25 to $251,887.50 or 193.1%!

* * * *

The labor bill of the railways has risen in the same period from $115,000,000 to $231,000,000,—101%!*

The cost of rails for a mile of track has gone up from $9,497 to $19,680—107%!

No cost has been unaffected by the general rise.

Operating expenses continue to rise more rapidly than Gross earnings. Net earnings are sinking at an alarming rate.

* * * *

These are the facts that lie behind the application for increased freight rates for the railways.

The EUREKA

DO YOUR HOUSEWORK

The Eureka Electric Vacuum Cleaner is the best in the world

Very light in weight and easy to operate. Requires almost no attention, and its cost for current is negligible.

IT GETS ALL THE DIRT— NOT THE CARPET

Cleans Upholstered Furniture, Mattresses and Curtains.

Renovates Feather Pillows, etc.

The Eureka cleans entirely by the most powerful, and at the same time, gentlest of all forces—AIR.

It thoroughly cleans the most delicate fabrics, or the heaviest carpet or rug, and at the same time thoroughly airs it, as the Eureka lifts the carpet or rug off the floor and sucks the dust laden air through it. When free of dust it continues to suck clean fresh air through, which airs the carpet or rug much more thoroughly than would be possible if cleaned in the ordinary way, because the dust is all deposited in the Eureka's dust bag, whereas when cleaning out of doors part of the dust falls back on the carpet.

Same old price, and free of all luxury taxes.

Order your Eureka now and learn what real satisfaction is.

The Eureka is built to last a lifetime.

For further information or demonstration 'phone 176, or call at ROBINSON'S CARPET DEPARTMENT.
